SECOND CONDITIONAL:*imaginary situations in the future or the presentIf ... Past Simple ..., ... would ...

United have lost to City in both their other matches, and they haven't won away all season, so they will probably lose; besides, even if United ~~win~~ the match tomorrow, they still wouldn't win the league.

If United ~~had~~ better players, they would win more matches.

THIRD CONDITIONAL: *imaginary situations in the pastIf ... Past Perfect ..., ... would have ...

If the City goalkeeper hadn't scored an own goal in the final minute of last Saturday's match against Albion, the match would have been a draw.

If Rovers ~~hadn't had to cancel~~ one of their matches against United, giving United an automatic victory, United wouldn't have won any matches at all.

MIXED AND MODAL CONDITIONALS

If City had drawn against Albion last Saturday, they would already be at the top of the table.

If Albion had won one of the other two games against City as well instead of drawing them both, City would now have no chance of winning.

If United had done better this season they might have been able to afford some better players for next year.
